Object Mythology Social Impact: Baby Alpaca Product Line

"Standing atop Macchu Picchu in Peru I decided that no matter what, I am going to make this happen ."
Karen Chien, Founder Object Mythology

Impacting Change: One Glove, Throw and Scarf at a Time

Just a few short years ago Karen Chien took her first soul searching trip to Peru and immediately felt an overwhelming personal connection to the country and people that has only grown stronger over her many visits. On her first trip traveling through Southern Peru she experienced a haunting beauty combined with overwhelming poverty that inspired her to do whatever she could to make a positive change. With a background in interior design and an eye for practical luxury, she decided the best way she could help was to provide income for the women of the region who have a strong tradition of weaving and knitting using baby alpaca, and the Object Mythology Baby Alpaca Line was born.

The Women Behind the Products

Initiated by a non-profit organization in Peru, the women in the artisan groups who create the Object Mythology Baby Alpaca Products received their training through a program developed to empower single women to learn a skill that provides income for their families. Many of these women have not completed an education beyond primary school, and in many situations, they have been abandoned by their husbands and are left to raise their children on their own. Their ability to generate income for their families from weaving and knitting, their only source of income, gives them self worth and improves their living conditions.

Our Impact

Object Mythology Baby Alpaca Products are created using fair trade practices and are made from the highest quality alpaca fibers. We are committed to preserving the traditional craftwork of our Peruvian artisans and supporting the communities where our products are made. So far, Karen and her team are proud to have employed over 115 artisans, positively impacting each of them along with over 335 family members that they support.
